A multipart feature series in the New York Times advances this thesis, depicting modern free market capitalism as an inherently "racist" institution and a direct lineal descendant of plantation slavery, still exhibiting the brutality of that system. This characterization draws heavily from the so-called "New History of Capitalism" (NHC) — a genre of historical writing that swept through the academy in the last decade and that aggressively promotes the thesis that free market ...

The argument that capitalism was dependent on slavery is, of course, not new. In 1944, Eric Williams, in Capitalism and Slavery, made the case. In 1968, the historian Lorenzo Greene wrote that...

Capitalism and Slavery | The Nation

Slavery was integral to the early development of capitalism, following the period of primitive accumulation of capital. The rise of industrial capitalism would not have been possible without the profits derived from slavery and the slave trade. Williams does a superb job of demonstrating how slavery turned Britain into an economic power.
