Research is difficult. Even though students are trained in the basic research methodology skills, when confronted with research writing, it feels to them as if they enter a bizarre world, with its own language and conventions, where it is hard to get things right. This book translates the apparent complexities of research writing into everyday ideas, language and skills, and will enable novice researchers to start overcoming the major stumbling blocks immediately. This book focuses only on the greatest challenges in research writing, specifically those that supervisors find most difficult to explain to novice researchers. These challenges include both basic and more complex skills, such as: finding original research contributions; establishing one's voice while drawing on other authors; turning a vague idea into a feasible research question; generating literature reviews that are original in themselves; and avoiding list-like writing when discussing the research methodology. Wentzel shows that it is easier to overcome these challenges, not with lists of prescriptions that are difficult to remember while writing, but rather by cultivating an argumentative mindset. Not only is such a mindset much easier to maintain, but it offers a central point around which one can organise any difficult writing task. The book shows how to use the argumentative mindset to approach every important writing challenge. It translates all the necessary skills into jargon-free language using a variety of visuals and simple step-by-step procedures that will enable any person to read the book quickly and start writing immediately. The book is accompanied by a website containing an instructor's manual with guidance on the teaching and assessment of research writing, as well as lecture slides.

High school students are lacking writing skills to be successful in post-secondary education, and in the work force. At work, writing is a gateway for employment and promotion, especially in salary positions. Those seeking employment in businesses as well as government and state jobs must be able to create clearly written documents such as emails, messages, memoranda, and technical reports. Writing also influences the participation in civic life and the community at large. In order to meet these post-secondary expectations for writing, new Common Core State Standards are being implemented in 45 states, including California. Common Core State Standards (CCSS) require high school students to write using evidence from primary and secondary source texts across academic areas, rather than from prior experience. Potentially, students with learning disabilities, especially those in their later years of high school, will be impacted because they will not have had the writing exposure. While the CCSS are already being implemented, no established curriculum has yet to be published for teachers to use. Therefore, the purpose of this project was to develop and pilot test a curriculum unit tailored specifically to meet the needs of students with learning disabilities and to promote their success in argumentative writing. With this curriculum, teachers can teach multiple lessons over a period of time to their students regarding effective argumentative writing. Students can develop and learn to use valid reasoning to support their claim as well as to provide relevant and sufficient evidence. The curriculum unit begins with an introduction and instructions on how to write a measurable IEP goal aligned with the relevant CCSS and guidelines for the implementation of explicit/direct instruction, UDL, scaffolding and other evidence-based organizational strategies to teach students with learning disabilities. Next, nine unit lessons plans offer strategies and materials to walk students through the step-by-step process of writing an argumentative essay. Manipulatives, such as a foldable or graphic organizer, and collaboration with peers are suggested to foster and strengthen writing skills. The curriculum unit was implemented twice with nineteen high school freshmen with learning disabilities using two separate writing prompts over a four-month period. Throughout the implementation of the lessons, growth was measured using a four-point rubric and the majority of students demonstrated progress toward meeting the CCSS standards for argumentative writing.
